Amuse

ments

Lee Arthur's comedy drama, "Private John Allen," will be introduced to the theater-goers of Akron, Thursday night, at the Grand, by Charles B. Hanford and Miss Marie Drounau, assisted by a selected company of players.

There are original situations in the story that make it most interesting. It deals with love, hatred, nobleness, villainy and politics. The stage settings are elaborate and fitting to the play. Mr. Hanford has been given a part in which he has been very successful. He should be well fitted to impersonate such a character as "Private John Allen."

Narrowly Escaped Being Mobbed by Students.

Rochester, Ind., April 17.—(Spl.)—About fifty masked students of Rochester Normal University made an attempt to mob Joe Heflinger, a resident of the south part of this town last evening about 9:30, because he placed tacks in the road in front of his home and punctured 13 tires to wheels belonging to students who rode past his house on their way to the college.

He hid in the cellar and they were unable to find him. Then they stoned the house and broke every glass of the windows and covered the house with spoiled eggs. Heflinger fired the contents of two revolvers at them, but no one was injured. The authorities will look into the matter. The faculty of the college will expel all students connected with the affair. The boys were armed with clubs, revolvers and a rope. The damage done will amount to $150.
